Example: My friend was given an apple. My friend was given an apple by me. However, there are some verbs which can not be passive: I cannot passivize this verb. The verb can not be passive even when it can be. Does it mean it's not allowed to use the passive form or not? If not, what can be the usage? A: The only two things that can be the subject of a passive clause are an agent and a patient. The subject can never be the patient. Since the passive can never be used with humans, either human agency is absent, like in the example: I cannot passivize this verb, or it is a clause of inchoative verbs that take a direct object: My friend was given an apple by me. The first example shows that I have no agent. I cannot be the subject, nor can any other entity. The second example demonstrates that in the passive, the agent must be the subject. I cannot be it, nor can any other entity be the subject. However, I'm not the patient, and I can clearly still be the subject of a sentence. Since I cannot be the patient f678ea9f9e
